

Goosy Woods gander where shall I wander, in the ladies chamber or up the hill yonder? Goosy Woods is a little orphan baby duck born from an egg left deserted in an old crummy nest. The unforeseen prediction was because there were no movements inside the egg, it was cursed as a bad omen or a still born or perhaps already rotted inside of the shell. It is just that one last chance that saved baby Goosy to tell the story

Goosy Wood's body parts started developing very late causing slow gentle movements not to be easily detected by her mother. Goosy Woods developed a complete head, brain, ears, nose, beak, vertebrae, heart, legs, muscles, lungs, glands, blood, kidneys and some fuzzy feathers. From the outward skeletal structure Goosy is wonderfully made except she started late. Goosy's parents and two siblings relocated but unfortunately were all short lived except the father, who was discovered later because of his love for sport as a sports caster.

Goosy Woods' was a premature developer. This baby duck must be incubated longer and is well fortified inside her shell, she hatched very late with fuzzy tender yellowish needle like hair then grew into a huge gorgeous multi colored duck which was no longer predicted as an omen but a blessing in disguise.

Goosy Wood's mother thought her prayer was fulfilled when she got her heart's desire to start her family. She quite rightly moved to an upscale secured neighborhood to raise her family. Her joy superseded her patience and tolerance to wait any longer for egg number three to hatch because her doubt was beyond repair.